HENLEY-PUTNAM UNIVERSITY HOSTS
INSIDER'S GUIDE TO INTERNET INTELLIGENCE COLLECTION

Faculty Webinar Series Offers Guidance On Careers in Intelligence, Law Enforcement, Counterterrorism, and Protection

(San Jose, CA, January 20, 2009) – Henley-Putnam University, a leading online university specializing in Strategic Security, announced its next free webinar, Insider's Guide to Internet Intelligence Collection. The webinar is Part 3 of Henley-Putnam's exclusive "Insider's Guide" webinar series, where intelligence experts discuss education and career opportunities in federal law enforcement, terrorism and counterterrorism, and personal protection.

Insider's Guide to Internet Intelligence Collection takes place Thursday, January 28, from 11:00 AM - 12:00 PM PST. The webinar will be led by Edward M. Roche, Ph.D., J.D., a professor of Intelligence Technology at Henley-Putnam University, Director of Scientific Intelligence for Barracough Ltd, and an expert on information technology, telecommunications, and virtual worlds.

During the webinar on January 28, Professor Roche will discuss how social media networks and virtual worlds have effected intelligence collection; methods of intelligence gathering and surveillance through social networks; actions being taken by law enforcement and intelligence agencies to monitor and combat terrorism through social networks; and the legal implications of using the Internet as a medium on intelligence gathering.

"The rapid rise of social networking presents unique challenges to the law enforcement and intelligence communities," said Dr. Roche. "It compels not only creation of new techniques of investigation, but also the training of a new generation of analysts."

Insider's Guide to Internet Intelligence Collection will take place Thursday, January 28, from 11:00 AM -
