Henley-Putnam University announces whitepaper on How to Break into the Intelligence Field

San Jose, CA, January 26, 2009 – Henley-Putnam University, a premier university for online higher education in the field of Strategic Security, is pleased to announce the release of a whitepaper entitled: “Breaking into the Intelligence Field – How to become an Intelligence Analyst.” This whitepaper is a follow-up to a previous article on careers in the strategic security field and is geared specifically towards those individuals interested in seeking Intelligence Jobs.

The intelligence sector offers many different types of career paths, including careers for social scientists, engineers, and computer scientists, among other specializations. The big question is, however, how does one “break” into the field. This whitepaper provides readers with information on how they can best prepare themselves to obtain a job as an intelligence analyst in this competitive field – whether it is working for a government intelligence agency or a job in the private sector. Included in the whitepaper is an outline of the intelligence field along with the types of jobs available to individuals who want to pursue a career as an intelligence analyst, as well as some important issues to consider when preparing for such a career, including the steps one should take to become more knowledgeable and thus, more marketable as an intelligence analyst. The article also includes a profiles and advice from current intelligence analysts.

“Henley-Putnam University is uniquely suited to preparing students for Intelligence Jobs as it provides both academic expertise and professional or tradecraft instruction”, according to Dr. Michael Corcoran, University President. “We are pleased to be in a position to provide useful career resources to prospective students who are exploring careers in the field of Strategic Security”.

Additional information about Henley-Putnam’s bachelor’s and master’s degree programs in Intelligence Management, Terrorism and Counterterrorism Studies, and Management of Personal Protection as well as Henley-Putnam’s doctoral degree program in Strategic Security can be found at www.Henley-Putnam.edu.
