G.I. Jobs Magazine Names Henley-Putnam University Among Top Military-Friendly Schools in the Country

(San Jose, CA, August 20, 2009) – G.I. Jobs magazine has selected Henley-Putnam University as among the top military-friendly schools in the country. The list, which will be published in September, honors the top 15 percent of more than 7,000 colleges, universities and trade schools with programs that best support military students.

“Henley-Putnam University’s programs are specifically designed to serve the military professional seeking advancement,” said Michael Corcoran, PhD, Henley-Putnam University president and former U.S. Secret Service agent. “We are honored to be on this distinguished list of American universities committed to creating opportunities for service members.”

According to G.I. Jobs, the 2010 Military-Friendly list was compiled by a committee of educators and college administrators through a comprehensive survey of more than 7,000 schools nationwide. Schools were carefully evaluated based on their certifications, programs, policies and other efforts to recruit and retain military and veteran students, as well their success in recruiting military students and academic accreditations.

Henley-Putnam University is approved for use of Veteran benefits and supported by DANTES, the American military's off-duty voluntary education program. The University is a member of Servicemembers Opportunity Colleges (SOC) Consortium, the American
